PATRICK A. COLLINS DEAD.

MAYOR OF BOSTON STRICKEN AT VIRGINIA HOT SPRINGS.

Was Consul-General at London Under Cleveland, and Refused a Place in the Cabinet-Won More Republican Votes Than Any Other Massachusetts Demoerat - His Rise From Poverty.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 14.-Mayor Patrick A. Collins of Boston died suddenly this morning at Virginia Hot Springs of hemorrhage of the bowels. Mayor Collins, with his son Paul, reached Hot Springs on September 6. It was one of his usual semi-annual visits, and his purpose was to take the baths after resting for a week. He had not begun to take the cure Tuesday night when he became violently ill with acute gastritis. Dr. Henry S. Pole and a trained nurse were hastily summoned, and under vigorous treatment he seemed to be improving. This morning he was well enough to sit up in bed. His son was by him, while the nurse was busied about the apartment, when suddenly the patient complained of pain in the abdomen, and a moment later fell backward dying.

Mayor Collins was conscious to the last, and though his last moments were marred by intense pain he was calm and attempted with his last breath to speak to his son. His death was a surprise to his physician, who, however, had considered his condition serious.

Mass will be said early to-morrow morning in the small Catholic chapel at Hot Springs, and the body will be taken to Boston, leaving on the 7 A. M. train.

the whole country, as did his speech seconding the nomination of Grover Cleveland four years later.

It was generally understood that Mr. Cleveland offered Mr. Collins a Cabinet office, but Mr. Collins, who had been a member of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses, did not like life in Washington and declined to take any office which would require him to move in the Washington atmosphere. Mr. Cleveland gave him instead one of the highest paid Government posts, that of Consul-General at London, where the salary is $5,000 a year, and the fees in Mr. Collins's time amounted to about $25,000 a year more. Mr. Collins resigned from the chairmanship of the Democratic State committee and went to London. While he was Consul-General Mr. Cleveland again asked him to come into the Cabinet as Secretary of War. Mr. Collins refused. He was quoted as saying that he refused because he "didn't care for second hand clothes." He never denied the remark. At the opening ceramonies of the Hotel Cecil Mr. Collins's remarks regarding the good will of Mr. Cleveland toward the British people were jeered by some of his hearers. He turned on them and said:

"There is no antagonism between the United States and any well meaning state on earth. If the rest of the world understood the United States as well as the United States understands the rest of the on earth. If the rest of the world understood the United States as well as the United States understands the rest of the world there would never be any danger to peace between my country and other nations." There were no more jeers. In 1897 Mr. Collins returned to the practise of law in Boston in the firm of Corcoran & Collins. He was nominated for Mayor in 1899, but was beaten by a factional fight in his own party. He was elected the next year and was reelected in every year since. Mayor Collins was an ardent lover of Ireland. A speech in Williamsburg in this city in 1865 was one of the foundation this city in 1865 was one of the foundation stones in his reputation as an orator. Mr. Collins always deprecated any confusion of American politics with loyalty to Irish welfare; he stood out uncompromisingly against the advocates of physical violence in the Fenian movement and severed all connection with it when the raid on

The new sergeants were all called into the Commissioner's office and Mr McAdoe gave them a talk along with their certificates. The newspaper reporters were invited to be present. Mr. McAdoo said;

"I want to say to you roundsmen who are now about to become sergeants that you do not owe your promotion to any living person. There is not one of you under the slightest obligation to any man, in or out of New York. I am not conscious that any man or organization could intervene between me and the promotion of a deserving man, or influence me to appoint a man whom I did not believe deserving of promotion. "You were all witnesses yesterday that I was perfectly frank in my examination of you before the advisory committee of prominent citizens whom I have called in, and in my criticism of your records presented by officers of this department. The very fact that I have selected you from Broadway Blocked by Alarm From Chop House-Fire Dog, Chief, Maimed.

The rattle and clang of fire apparatus stirred up Broadway last night. The alarm was from the Thirty-ninth street corner. The trouble was a chimney fire at Browne's chop house.

In cook allowed a pan of lat to tip over and the flames roared up the chimney. Sparks went flying over the roof of the Empire Theater and into Fortleth street. Some one turned in an alarm and soon six engines and their tenders, two hook and ladder trucks, a water tower, a patrol truck and two battalion chiefs were on the Apolt.

The employees of both the Broadway and the Empire Theater closed all the doors and the audiences knew nothing of what was going on outside.

The fire was quickly extinguished with a bag of salt. Some of the diners in the restaurant left their tables, but quickly returned when they learned there was no denote.

turned when they learned there was no danger.

The fire gathered an enormous crowd and the police reserves had a hard time getting Broadway opened for traffic.

On the way to the fire Chief, a coach dog, the pet of Truck 26 got under the wheels of the truck as it turned into Broadway from Thirty-eighth street.

Two of his legs were broken. One of the firemen leaped off and, gathering Chief in his arms, ran with him to the firehouse on Thirty-seventh street. A veterinarian was sent for and he expressed the belief that Chief, having a good constitution, might pull through if his legs were set.

Police Commissioner McAdco commented bitterly yesterday on the action of the courts in granting injunctions in the cases of suspected poolrooms. His remark a were called forth by a question as to what he thou ht of the recent action of the Western Union Telegraph Company in again deciding to abolish the collection of racing news. The Commissioner said:

"I have to-day asked for a complete list of poolrooms in Greater New York where the polics have been enjoined by the courts. The police are confident that many of these places, from which they are barred by injunction, are running as poolrooms, and it is most embarrassing to our efforts to be so-strictly enjoined.

"I say this because I am constantly in receipt of appeals from people living in neighborhoods where they say poolrooms are being run. I have before me now a tearful letter from a father, who tells me that his son is being ruined by playing the races in a place where the police are enjoined from interfering. In this place, as in others, a fictitious business is conducted as a mask to the violation of law.

"It is a practise now where places secure injunctions for them to remain quiet for a while and let the injunction soak in. Lawyers then threaten me with peril and damages if I raise a finger. Then slowly, but surely, with patrons who are cirefully identified and so well known as to be safe and steady customers, the place is launched on its career of crime."

Mr. McAdoo received the list of suspected places last night. It is a big one and covers nearly every section of the city. After looking the list over he says he will have it published.
